Graduate Recommendation Letter

I am writing to offer my strongest recommendation for XXX, who is applying to the University of San Francisco's Master of Science in Health Informatics program. I was James' clinical instructor and professor in his Bachelor of Science in Nursing program at Fairfield University from 2008-2012. He is a conscientious and driven student, which was evident both in the classroom and in a clinical setting.

XXX was a student in my Pediatric Nursing class in the spring of 2011. He achieved excellent grades, and he exhibited a level of self-awareness that few students possess at such a young age. He confided to me that he was interested in pursuing a career in healthcare that focused on technology and systems. To achieve this goal, XXX developed a long-term plan that included first gaining clinical experience as an RN prior to pursuing a non-clinical role. His work as an RN has opened new doors for XXX and allowed him to develop his passion for health informatics. Since becoming an RN, XXX has led various informatics committees and become an Electronic Health Record Super User. He has exhibited maturity by establishing a long-term plan to explore different facets of the healthcare system working in acute, sub-acute, and outpatient settings while cultivating experience in informatics along the way. I have encouraged James to pursue his passion for health informatics, and I am proud of the success he has earned thus far as a clinician.

In his performance at Fairfield University, XXX established that he is a hard-working and intelligent student who can succeed both independently and collaborating with peers. He has a high sense of responsibility for his work, and it is always done to the highest possible standards. He was acknowledged regularly on the Dean's List, and he went on to graduate magna cum laude, earning a major GPA of 3.92. James also showed a great deal of perseverance as a student by maintaining academic excellence despite losing his mother to cancer while attending college. The faculty recognized his commitment and dedication and awarded him the Fairfield University School of Nursing Phyllis E. Porter Achievement Award for his determination.

In conclusion, XXX is an intelligent and compassionate young man with an outstanding future ahead of him. Given the diligence and intellect he demonstrated as an undergraduate, I am confident XXX will succeed in his studies at a higher level. I can therefore enthusiastically recommend XXX as a candidate for the University of San Francisco's Master of Science in Health Informatics program. I am proud to see the success that XXX has obtained thus far in his career, and I look forward to watching him grow as a health informatics professional. Please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions regarding XXX and his potential as a graduate student at the University of San Francisco.
